Part VI Error Correction (10 marks)

There is no doubt that the environment is in trouble. Factories burn fossil fuels where produce acid rain, and this kills trees. At the same time, greenhouse gases raise into the air and contribute to global warming, which threatens to melt the polar ice cap. Meanwhile, farmers clear huge areas of rain forest in places so as the Amazon to produce feeding land for cattle or produce wood for building. Rivers and oceans are so heavily contaminated by industrial waste. Cars pump out poisonous gases which we all have to breathe in. Poaching and overfish are killing off millions of animals, including whales, elephants and other endanger species. In fact, our finely balanced ecosystem is $\wedge$ systematically destroyed by human greed and thoughtlessness.

There is a lot we can all do, however, to help prevent this. The easy thing, of course, is to recycle waste material such as paper and glass so that we can use it again. We should also check that the thing we buy from supermarket are packaged in biodegradable packaging which decompose easily. At the same time, we should make a conscious effort to avoid foods, which are genetically modified (at least until someone proves that they are safe both for us and for the environment). Finally, of course, a small car and unleaded petrol should be used, which are few harmful to the environment or, ever better, make more use of public transport. We cannot all be as committed as environmentalists, but we can at least do our own little bit with grass roots level. We, as humans, have inhabited the earth, but that doesn't mean we can do whatever we like with it.

Part I Listening Comprehension (35 marks)

Section A (15 marks)

In this section, you will hear two conversations. Each conversation will be read only once. At the end of each conversation, there will be a one-minute pause.

Listen to each conversation. Then read the four choices marked A, B, C and D, and decide which is the best answer according to what you hear. Then mark the corresponding letter on the answer sheet with a single line through the centre.

Conversation One (5 marks)

W: Hello, Professor Smith.

M: Hello, Mia.

W: Would you be able to help me organize my essay?

M: Certainly. What topic have you chosen?

W: Women in politics.

M: That topic is very broad. I think you should narrow it down.

W: Do you think I could just do women in English speaking countries — say the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Britain?

M: Well, that would be better.

W: I am interested in the pattern of political involvement of women in those western democracies. With New Zealand and Australia leading the way, women in those countries had the vote soon after the end of World War I.

- M: It would be good to begin with a discussion of when women got the right to vote and how they use it.
- W: The record of women in politics in all those countries has been similar. None of them has women representing more than 10 percent of the national legislature.
- M: Remember, it is not what you think. You must back up your opinions with facts. Support for all your ideas is essential. I think you should check the statistics on what percentage of women hold political office in the national government.
- W: Okay, I also plan to discuss the role of organized women's rights movements.
- M: That's a good idea, but remember this term paper is only 5,000 words so you must keep your topic focused.
- W: Could I bring you a rough draft next week?
- M: I would prefer it if you brought an outline breaking down your main topics and subtopics. It may be a good idea to bring some of your reference materials along.
- W: Sure, I will do that. Thank you very much.

Conversation Two (10 marks)

- W: Today's guest needs no introduction. He is a man who has given us hours of interest and entertainment over the years, with his weekly series of wildlife programmes. He is, of course, Martin Middleton. Martin, you've been to the four corners of the Earth in search of material. Where did this love of adventure come from?
- M: I don't really know. I didn't travel much as a child, but I remember reading about the East and being fascinated by it. Then, when I was about 12, I met someone who'd been to Singapore—and to me that seemed incredible. Of course, when I started in television, back in the early 1960s, I didn't travel to make a wildlife programme—I went along and filmed at the local zoo. So, when I said I'd like to go and film in Africa, the Head of Programmes just laughed at me.
- W: And did you go to Africa?
- M: On that occasion, no. But I eventually got them to allow me to go to Borneo in 1962. There was just me and a cameraman. We went off for four months, filming whatever we saw something interesting. We bought a canoe, paddled upriver for ten days and ended up in a traditional longhouse. Nowadays, of course, it's all quite different.

W: Different? In what way?

M: We do months of preparation before we set off, so when we start filming, we know exactly what scenes we want to get. I mean, you don't get up in the morning and say to your team, "What shall we do this morning?" You have to know exactly what each scene is going to show—to work to a strict plan.

W: What I wonder is where somebody like you, who travels to all these exotic places as part of their work, goes on holiday?

M: I'm not good at lying on a beach—that's for sure. I wouldn't go to a place just to sit around. It's nice to have an objective when you've travelling—to have something you want to film. I've just come back from the Dominican Republic, and we were put up for the first night in a big hotel. The place was absolutely full of people, just lying there sunbathing. They seemed quite happy to spend the whole day stretched out around the pool. They never seemed to want to go and explore the amazing things there were to see outside the hotel. For me, that would be a very boring way to spend a holiday.

W: Your programmes, though, must have inspired a lot of people to take their holidays in remote and little-known places.

M: You are probably right, but, well, I have mixed feelings about all this. I go back to the places where, years ago, I was the only European, and now there are cruise ships coming three times a day. So you worry that in ten years or so, every remote place on the planet will be swallowed up, because everyone will be visiting it. But, on the other hand, I am in favor of tourism that is done in a way that protects the environment. You can see a good example of this in the Galapagos Islands, where the tourism is carefully managed. That's very successful, and could be a model for the future.

Section B (10 marks)

In this section, you will hear five short news items. Each item will be read only once. After each item, there will be a fifteen-second pause. During the pause, read the question and the four choices marked A, B, C and D, and decide which is the best answer. Then mark the corresponding letter on the answer sheet with a single line through the centre.

11. Somalia is in desperate need of aid, says British-based Oxfam International. Reports indicate decreased rainfall in the arid region, and the situation is critical in areas such as Gedo and Juba. Oxfam reports that some areas in central and southern Somalia have received less than 15 percent of their typical rainfall in recent months. An estimated two million people are living off food aid in Somalia and as the drought continues that number is likely to rise.
12. The Spanish state broadcaster is to stop showing bullfighting because of the anxiety it could cause to children. In an update to its editorial guidelines, the broadcaster RTVE includes bullfighting in a section entitled "Violence with Animals", and says showing it to children should be avoided. The main bullfighting organization has said it's astounded at the move.
13. A footbridge across a river has collapsed in northeastern India, throwing scores of people into the water below. At least 30 are feared dead, many of them women and children. Twenty-eight others were rescued after the bridge gave way in the state of Arunachal Pradesh. One report said villagers had crowded onto the bridge to catch a type of insect eaten locally.
14. We've now had a way of working on insects to change their behavior with how to stop locusts swarming, and a possible way of changing crops to help them survive a drought. Now here's an ingenious piece of research that tries to do both at the same time. To control insect activity and the crop grow through one treatment. It's all down to pheromones, the chemical signals that allow members of the same species of plant or animal to communicate. They're as powerful as hormones, which travel in the blood, but unlike hormones they travel through the air. And it's the 50th birthday of their discovery this year.
15. UN Secretary-general Ban Ki-moon has expressed his concern over the ongoing tensions in the Middle East during his visit to the Austrian capital, Vienna. He addressed both sides must hit the agreement that cease fire sustainable. He said a negotiated two-state solution is needed to end the conflict. The UN chief made the remarks after meeting with Austrian leaders in Vienna.

Section C (10 marks)

In this section, you will hear one monologue. The monologue will be read twice. After listening, answer the questions using no more than five words. Write the answers on the answer sheet.

Now, I'd like to begin by giving you a few points on taking notes in lectures. This is a vital skill, so listen up! Most important of all is that you shouldn't try to make a note of everything you hear. A lecture is not a dictation. You have to listen and decide what is important and what isn't. Second, when you make notes, don't write everything in full. Use abbreviations, symbols, numbers ... anything to help keep pace. Also, try to organize your notes effectively. Furthermore, you should try to be an active listener. By that, I mean you need to try and predict what the speaker is going to say.... So before the lecture, ask yourself what you already know about the topic, and during the lecture think about where the talk might be heading. Another useful tip is if you miss something then don't panic. Lecturers usually repeat themselves ... certainly, the important information ... for example, by paraphrasing or summarizing. Something else you should be sure to do is listen for the main ideas, as well as details, otherwise you won't be able to see the wood for the trees. And finally, after the lecture, you should review your notes as soon as possible. That means basically writing them out again, but this time reorganize them, highlight the main points, and even add your own thoughts and comments in the margin. Reviewing your notes in this way will help everything sink in, and make a useful study aid. So, now I've covered that I'll start with the register.

This is the end of the listening part. Please transfer your answers to the answer sheet.
