M: Hello, Holly. You're not working in the café this afternoon, then?

W: Actually Chris, I've given up the job. Yesterday was my last day.

M: (6) Really? That's a bit unexpected. The staff there always seem quite happy and relaxed. Were they bad employers then?

W: That wasn't the problem. It was me. I was just getting too far behind with my studies and I realized I would have to concentrate more on my college work.

M: Have you been worried about this for a long time then?

W: (7) Well no, last term I was able to keep up, and my scores were fine, but there's so much more to do now, what with writing longer essays and having to start revising soon as well.

M: (8) Sure, but I never thought of you finding it difficult, like I often do! All the way along, you've been at the top of our group and you always appear so confident in lectures and things.

W: Well, even though you may think that way, Dr Garrett certainly doesn't. (9) Although I tried to persuade him everything would be Okay, he made me go and see the head of department on Monday. And the first thing she asked me was whether I had a job...

M: (10) But everyone at college has one, don't they? We wouldn't have enough money to live on if we didn't do some work.

W: That's true, but I'd got the balance completely wrong! I kept trying to work extra hours at the café, which meant six afternoons some weeks and four nights a week till ten thirty, too.

M: Oh, I see what you mean, that does seem a bit too much. But won't you still need to earn some money to support yourself?

W: I'll be alright until the summer, as I've saved quite a lot. The important thing now is college.

M: Well, let me know if I can help at all!

W: Thanks, Chris.

W: Welcome, Joe Durrant. You made an amazing journey, travelling 3,000 kilometres across Europe on a skateboard. What made you decide to do it?

M: Two years ago I was feeling pored with my job and was looking for a challenge. (11) I heard about an organisation called Boardwalk that helps teenagers with difficulties. I'm good at skateboarding and I know Europe well, so I thought, why not raise money for Boardwalk by skateboarding through France to the Spanish capital Madrid—about 3,000 kilometres.

W: Did you get help from local businesses?

M: Definitely. I already had all the camping equipment I needed, so several firms gave money to Boardwalk instead. And I'd organised several trips across Europe as a student so deciding which route to take wasn't a problem. (12) The travel agent in my town provided boat tickets to our starting point on the north coast of France, which was great.

W: Yes! Did you travel on your own?

M: Two friends in their camper van acted as a back-up vehicle. (13) They didn't actually follow me but they carried the tents and luggage between the overnight stops, and we met up at the end of each day. Funnily enough, their van broke down a couple of times, while I had no problems at all with my skateboard, although I took several spare sets of wheels.

W: But how many pairs of shoes did you need?

M: Five pairs! There was one pair of trainers that only lasted a day. That was crossing the mountains into Spain. The roads were really steep and stony and I could see snow up on the mountain tops. (14) Coming down was terrible because I had to use my foot as a brake. By the end of the day, the new pair of trainers I'd put on that morning were ruined and I had to throw them away.

W: Oh no! Did you have any accidents?

M: (15) Just one, in Barcelona. And I wasn't even on my skateboard! I was having my photo taken for my website. I jumped up and landed on a piece of metal and cut my foot. I couldn't walk for ten days afterwards but I was more worried about my camera, which I'd dropped as I fell. Luckily it wasn't damaged.

W: And how do you feel now it's all over?

M: Fantastic because it has been so successful for Boardwalk. I'd love to work for them one day. I expected to feel depressed but I've been busy writing a book about my trip. It isn't always easy but it's good fun !

W: That's great. Thanks for talking to us, Joe.

Contador, a three-time Tour de France winner, tested positive for the banned substance Clenbuterol on the final rest day of this year's race. Contador himself has made this positive result public, and he alleges that food contamination is the only possible explanation. The UCI, cycling's world governing body, have said the B test confirms the first result, and they have suspended the cyclist while they carry out further scientific investigations. In a statement, they described the traces of Clenbuterol as being "a very small concentration", 400 times less than the amount WADA -accredited labs must be able to detect, but they are still looking into what they describe as an "adverse analytical finding". If the results are upheld, Contador could lose his Tour title and face a two-year ban from cycling.

Section D (10 marks)

Dictation

【答案】

21. register a brand

22. amounts of money

23. fundamental

24. trusted source

25. deeper levels

【录音原文】

Consumers are creatures of habit: they buy the same products time and time again, and such is their familiarity with big brands and the colours and logos that represent them, that they can (21) register a brand they like with barely any conscious thought process. The packaging of consumer products is, therefore, a crucial vehicle for delivering the brand and the product into our shopping baskets.

Having said this, understanding how consumers make decisions, and the crucial role of packaging in this process has been a neglected area of research so far. This is surprising given that organisations invest huge (22) amounts of money in developing packaging that they believe is effective—especially at the retail level.

The research has focused on two (23) fundamental types of thinking. On the one hand, there's "heuristic processing", which involves very shallow thought and is based on very simple rules: 1) buy what you recognize, 2) choose what you did last time, or 3) choose what a (24) trusted source suggests. This requires comparatively little effort, and involves looking at—and thinking about—only a small amount of the product information and packaging. One can do this with little or no conscious thought.

On the other hand, "systematic processing" involves much (25) deeper levels of thought. When people choose goods in this way, they engage in quite detailed analytical thinking—taking account of the product information, including its price, its perceived quality and so on. This form of thinking, which is both analytical and conscious, involves much more mental effort.

Summary

26.science fiction film

(在第一句话中, "The future is coming, but, according to the experts, it probably won't look like the set of a science fiction film", 未来就在眼前, 但据专家所言, 未来可能并不会像科幻电影中的场景那样。)

27.change

(录音中提到"One place where we are likely to see big changes is the home", 我们将会在家中看到巨大的变化。)

28.computer screen

(在"In the living room"部分中提到"New touch-screen technology built into the furniture means that the dining room table could become a computer screen", 家具内置的新型触摸屏技术意味着餐桌可以变成电脑屏幕。)

29.Internet

(在"In the kitchen"部分中提到"the refrigerator could be connected to the Internet", 冰箱可以连接上互联网。)

30.clothes

(录音最后提到"An interactive mirror in the bedroom may allow you to see how you look in different clothes without the need to try them on", 卧室里的互动镜子可以让你不用试穿, 就能看到自己穿不同衣服的样子。)

【录音原文】

(26) The future is coming, but, according to the experts, it probably won't look like the set of a science fiction film. Everyday items will look pretty much like those we see around us today. But under the surface, things are changing, and in twenty years' time the products we use will definitely be able to do a lot more than they can today.

(27) One place where we are likely to see big changes is the home. Developments in hardware and software will make everyday living simple and easy. When you walk into a room, the lights and heating will come on automatically and your favourite music will start to play without you having to do or say anything. It may even be possible to program the system to display artwork that suits individual family members' personal tastes as they go around the house.

In the living room, pressing a single button on the remote control will lower the lights, close the curtains, and switch off the music as the system realises that a movie is about to start. (28) New touch-screen technology built into the furniture means that the dining room table could become a computer screen. You might be able to place a mobile phone on a table and see digital pictures in its glass surface that were taken with the phone at school or work.

In the kitchen, (29) the refrigerator could be connected to the Internet. It would "talk" to the supplier, and order replacement parts without you ever knowing something was wrong. This fridge will be able to tell you what's inside it, making the job of creating a shopping list much easier. And, as you remove the food from the fridge, and place it on the counter top, another computer there will recognise what it is and begin to suggest recipes.

This is all possible because tiny, inexpensive computer chips will be attached to every product in the house, including your clothes. So, the washing machine will know how to wash your favourite linen shirt and your wardrobe will be able to tell you which clothes are at the dry-cleaner's and when they are due back. (30) An interactive mirror in the bedroom may allow you to see how you look in different clothes without the need to try them on.

76. 【参考译文】

不可否认的是，我们生活在一个日益商业化的社会。在这个社会里，商品以或高或低的特定价格出售。然而，幸福不是商品。幸福大多与你拥有的物质条件有关。这种联系是消极还是积极，都由我们来决定。幸福是一种超越物质占有的精神状态。无论一个人拥有多少财产，感受幸福的能力才是真正的无价之宝。

【解析】(1) 句式结构：② "No one would deny that" 中的 no one 并不是实意主语，可以直接翻译成副词，更符合中文的表达方式。第一句中 where 引导的定语从句可以后置翻译，避免句子冗长。(2) 翻译要点：① increasingly 日益。 a true valuable asset that no money can buy 意为“金钱买不到的珍贵资产”，可以用中文四字词语“无价之宝”替代。

(句子主于是“……或……是不明智的”，可采用 "It is not wise to do sth...nor..." 句型。nor 与否定词连用，表示“也不”，power and fame 权力与名望。indulge in 是固定搭配，意为“沉湎于，沉溺于”。)

Over the past century, or so, major advancements in technology have fundamentally changed the way people live. In traditional wisdom, these changes have made life easier and more rewarding, but there are many people who mourn the passing of simpler times and acclaim that people do not work as hard today as they did in the past.

As far as I am concerned, the situation is exactly the opposite. There is little doubt that technology has made our lives busier. With mobile phones and email, it is harder than ever to truly escape the workplace, and many now have to deal with work whilst on holiday. While new technology undoubtedly makes many tasks easier and saves time, it also facilitates a more intensive lifestyle where people expect to achieve much more. It is now possible to chat with dozens of friends on social networks while keeping an eye on stock prices, sending work emails, and flying from one side of the world to the other. Many feel obliged to live in this way, and thus it isn't surprising they work harder than ever before.

In conclusion, technology has made life more intense and people work even harder than they did before. It has made life more stimulating and rewarding.

【解析】本作文主要谈论科技发展的影响，现代人是否工作不如过去那么努力。首先第一段可以点出科技发展引文争议，再提出自己的观点，科技发展反而使人们更忙，工作更努力了。接着论证自己的观点。指出手机和电子邮件让人难以逃离工作，哪怕度假也要处理工作事项。但同时新科技也让工作变得容易、省时，让人们能真正做到日理万机。最后一段重申自己的观点，进行总结。
