Like many other houses in the village it was rumoured to be haunted. One particular evening, a couple of day before New Year's Eve, the house was bitterly cold and rather gloomy because it had been snowing heavy all day. All of us were sitting around the fire in the living room listen to one of grandma's favourite stories, when suddenly there was a very big crash from upstairs above. All our thoughts turned to the ghost she had been telling us with and we looked at each other in horror. When we rush up the stairs, however, we discovered that the branch of a tree had snapped in the wind and broke one of the bedroom windows into pieces. I'll always remember the expression on grandma face. "I've never been so scared in all my life!" was all she could whisper.
