The most common legend about the discovery of coffee is that it happened in the ninth century A. D. A goat herder in Ethiopia named Kalil noticed that his goats became very active after they ate red berries from a leafy (21) bush. He tried a few berries himself, and he was soon as (22) overactive as his herd. Kalil told other people in his tribe about his experience, and for the next four hundred years, people chewed the berries because they (23) gave quick energy.

Recent botanical evidence indicates that Coffee arabica was first grown on the plateaus of central Ethiopia. There, the Galla tribe used to mix the beans with animal fat and eat this mixture as a source of (24) nutrition. In 1000 A. D., the Arabs began to boil the beans and (25) created a drink they called “qahwa,” which means wine, coffee, or any drink made from plants. Coffee was also used by the people of that region to get more energy. However, the Turks were the first to adopt coffee as an everyday drink, often adding (26) spices to the brew. The world's first coffeehouse was opened in Constantinople in 1475.

The introduction of coffee in Europe (27) came much later. The delicacy was guarded like a military secret, and transportation of the plant out of the Muslim regions (28) was forbidden. In the 1600s, coffee was introduced in Europe by Italian traders through the port of Venice. Soon coffee became a popular European beverage, too. Coffeehouses (29) spread in one country after another, and became popular meeting places. The first coffeehouses opened in England around 1650, and almost twenty years later coffee (30) replaced beer as New York City's breakfast drink.

Today coffee is drunk in millions of homes and workplaces all over the world, and coffee shops are found at almost every intersection in major cities.

My View on High Incomes between Different Jobs

Nowadays many famous pop and sports stars have very high incomes. While most people in ordinary professions like nurses, doctors and teachers earn only a small fraction of the incomes of these stars. Some people assume this is not fair because stars do the job with less value compared with teachers and doctors but are paid too high. In my opinion, I reckon it is not fair.

Firstly, the access to be a teacher or a doctor is much difficult than stars in general. People must be educated well to teach and treat patient. It takes so many years to complete related courses to be a teacher and a doctor. While for stars, some people just need to seize a good opportunity to be famous overnight with a pretty face.

Secondly, the value of the two profession varies a lot. The society respect teachers and doctors for they educate people generation by generation and they treat patients, even save their lives. While stars just give performances for people, and some of the performances have no meaning at all.

All in all, teachers and doctors should be paid well to match their great work. Stars should be paid less.
