【录音原文】

I know it's bad for me but I still can't stop.

I'm Ross. I went to see Mr. Green because I think it's time to stop smoking. It's time to stop because I can't keep doing this to myself. But here's the real problem. I should quit, but like a lot of you struggling with the same habit, I really don't want to. At least, not yet.

Smoking has been very good to me. Cigarettes have never let me down, never abandoned me on lonely, desperate nights. Smoking clears my head and helps me think. Smoking has started conversations and driven away annoying people. Smoking helps me celebrate victories, get over losses and comfort the comfortless. It also chases away the mosquitoes.

I will quit. Soon. My body and my mind are demanding that I do, daily.

I claim to smoke for pleasure, but I realise that slowly, steadily, I'm losing control of this close, special friend. I realise it's not just a “habit”. I'm hooked.

So here I am, attempting to give up again, at Mr. Green's place. I've tried all the other quitting techniques available. Any time the urge to smoke strikes, he said, just call him immediately and he'll help. The funny thing is, I realise that I'm not phoning him to stop me from lighting up. I'm phoning him so I can. If I call, I'll have done my part. Then I can smoke this cigarette. Besides, I know that at 9:30 on a Friday “The office is open from ten to four. Call me back then. This machine does not take messages.”

I put the phone down and I can honestly say that I'm relieved. You see, it's not Mr. Green's fault or anyone else's fault that I'm still smoking. It's mine.

Now if you'll excuse me, I'm going to smoke this cigarette. Whether I'll really enjoy it, though, is another story.

Cooperation Versus Competition

What is competition? What does it mean to compete? According to the dictionary, competition is the attempt to outdo someone else, to be (46) _____ (good) or achieve more than someone else. Most living things, including humans, seem to have an inborn trait (47) t _____ pushes them to compete. This is probably (48) _____ (connect) to the instinct for survival.

What is cooperation, then? What does it mean to cooperate? Is cooperation of any use to humans? The dictionary tells us that cooperation is the process of working together for a common purpose or goal. That is, people are willing to work together, and they have (49) _____ (basic) the same purpose in mind. Like competitiveness, (50) _____ (cooperative) also seems to come at birth because all living things perform better and achieve more when (51) _____ (work) together. Do you doubt this? Just look at a colony of ants or a flock of geese during migration.

When is it good to cooperate, and when is it good to (52) c _____? Does the answer to this depend on the area or circumstances? For example, is competition more important in sports? Or does it depend on the specific sport, for example?

In school, do students perform better in a competitive environment or in a cooperative one? Within families, is competition amongst brothers and sisters normal and natural? Can families function without at least some cooperation? If so, how?

For centuries, researchers, educators, and (53) _____ (psychology) and philosophers have been trying to answer questions like these, but so far no one is completely sure. We don't really know (54) whe _____ one is more useful or more important than the other or not. In general, humans appear to be both competitive and cooperative, but the happiest humans seem to achieve a good (55) bal _____ between the two.

50. cooperativeness

(由前面的 competitiveness 可知, 此处应填一与其词性相同的词, 作并列成分。)

51. working

(此处 when 后面省略了主语 they 和系动词 are, 所以用动词 ing 形式, 也可表述为 when they work together。)

52. compete

(文章的主题就是合作与竞争, 根据前面的 cooperate 可知, 这里应填 compete。)

53. psychologists

(由前面的 researchers, educators 可知, 此处也应是表示人物的复数名词。psychologist 心理学家。)

54. whether

(whether...or not 为固定搭配, 意为“是否”。)

Part IV Reading Comprehension (40 marks)

Read the following passages. Each passage is followed by several questions. Respond to the questions according to the passage. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

Section A (10 marks)

Questions 56-60 are based on the following passage.

Before the Consultants Arrive

Management consultants are advisers hired by a company to help improve overall operations. They do not usually focus on one or two functions within the company they advise. Rather, they aim to see a bigger picture and assess the interrelationship of all. Their arrival presents both great opportunity and great risk. (56) Advance steps taken by the management of the client company play a big role in determining which it will be.

The greatest value of external consultants is the perspective of a group of informed outsiders. They must be familiar with the basic standards of quality within the client's field without being immersed in the firm's internal rivalries, social cliques, or unexamined corporate traditions. One possible trap (57) here would be a lack of true independence, perhaps because of personal or business relationships with someone inside the client company. A consultant who is an old college buddy of the accounting manager is not likely to fairly evaluate the accounting department. Such connections are not hard to screen for, but the screening has to be done thoroughly and out in the open before the consultants even set foot on site.

Making sure the management consultants are adequately informed is a harder problem. One assumes they have the professional qualifications to do the job, but their specialized knowledge of the firm is only as good as what they discover once they begin (60) their interviews among company employees. If an employee sees the management consultants as a threat, whatever he or she says is unreliable. The team's questions may be seen as a means of discovering what that particular employee has done wrong. Full frankness, the thinking goes, could cause me to lose some of my privileges, my stature, or (at worst) my job. My solutions: manipulate the truth so I look really good.

To head off such unhelpful sentiments, any company contracting with management consultants should begin talking up the enterprise at least two months in advance. The message should be, "This is an opportunity, not an investigation." Convince employees that the outside review is their chance to influence the future direction of the company. Lay out in advance a set of rules for protecting the anonymity (匿名) of employees. Supervisors should not be able to link any individual to any particular point of view unless he or she wants. (58) Since distortions of the truth could also include unfair negative statements about one's "enemies" within the firm, the system must also protect employees from complaint-bearing colleagues. Most management consultants have calibrated (校准) their data-gathering tools to weed out vengeful (报复的) attacks, but the company should emphasize in advance that the consultants' report will contain no references to individuals. Furthermore, the consulting team must be reminded to apply a strict standard of evidence, so that no apparent weakness in the company even shows up in the report unless multiple, independent sources point to it.

Questions 56-58: Read the questions and the four choices marked A, B, C and D, and decide which is the best choice according to the passage.

56. Which of the statements below best expresses the most important information in the underlined sentence in the first paragraph?

- B. A company takes a big risk by hiring management consultants.
- C. The success of a consulting review depends on how well a company prepares for it.
- D. The client company must decide beforehand on a suitable group of management consultants.

57. The underlined word "here" in the second paragraph means _____.

- A. in a tradition
- B. in a company
- C. in a field
- D. in a relationship

58. Which statement best expresses the most important information in the underlined sentence in the last paragraph?

- A. A consultant review focuses on interpersonal problems among employees.
- B. Some employees might use a review as a chance to say negative things about others.
- C. Consultants must know they are safe from attacks by employees.
- D. During a review, employees should be kept safe from personal attacks by other employees.

Questions 59-60: Complete the following statements with information given in the passage in a maximum of three words for each blank.

59. The greatest value of external consultants is the perspective of many _____.

60. The underlined word "their" in the third paragraph refers to _____.

【答案与解析】

56. C 该句意为“管理咨询的成功很大程度上取决于客户公司想要达到的高度”，选项中 C 项是该句的同义表达，故 C 项正确。

57. B 第二段前面说到了外包咨询顾问的好处，然后提到公司内部顾问会遇到的问题，即人际之间可能会出现等问题等等，所以此处的 here 指的是公司内部。

58. D 原句意为“既然歪曲事实也同样包括公司内部死对头间的不公正的负面攻击，这项制度同样保护雇员免受同事的言语攻击”，结合选项，D 项与原句意义最接近。

59. informed outsiders

60. management consultants

(此处意为，管理顾问在面试公司员工的时候才发现他们的专业知识和普通员工的差不多，所以这里的 their 指的是 management consultants。

Section B (10 marks)

Questions 61-65 are based on the following passage.

Peer Mediation (调解) on Campus

Things have not gone well lately between Anna and Carly, two roommates in a dormitory at a Midwestern public university. Anna likes to stay up late, and Carly is not happy about being kept awake night after night. Carly spends hours each day talking on her cell phone, driving Anna “crazy” with all the chatter. Mutually annoyed, they have become distrustful, suspecting each other of stealing small personal items and reading private correspondence.

This sort of conflict is so commonplace as to seem silly or trivial, but it could have serious consequences—bad grades, loss of personal confidence, and even perhaps physical violence. Colleges and universities have to take them seriously and try to resolve them.

The old-school solution is simply to threaten the disputants with some disciplinary action if they don't stop fighting. This approach wrongheadedly treats a personal conflict as a violation of the university rules. It may drive the dispute underground but is unlikely to resolve it.

Another “solution” that seems obvious is to separate the roommates by re-shuffling room assignments. If only one such conflict erupted each semester, this might defuse the conflict (again without actually resolving it), but a room-shuffling policy is doomed by its own impracticality. Any university following such a policy would be so overwhelmed that its residential-life staff would do little else all semester but process room-change requests.

In search of a sustainable, pragmatic policy, many universities have turned to a highly successful conflict-resolution strategy called peer mediation. In any kind of mediation, a third party—the mediator—helps both sides in a conflict come up with possible solutions and a plan for implementing them. The mediator arranges meetings between the parties, directs the conversation, and helps clarify the issues. Beyond that, conflict resolution is up to the disputants themselves.

Mediation differs from another conflict-resolution strategy called arbitration (仲裁), in which a mediator does not propose or impose solutions. An arbitrator listens to both sides, asks questions, and then issues a judgment about the best way to resolve things. Any plan for moving forward is constructed by the arbitrator, not by the disputants, who may or may not think the arbitrator's decisions are fair and practical. The parties in the conflict comply because they have to, not necessarily because they want to. Especially with independent-minded young people, such coercive methods rarely work. In mediation, by contrast, there is no plan for resolving the conflict unless the disputants come up with one.

Questions 61-62: Read the passage, and then tell whether the following statements are true (T) or false (F).

61. The problems between Anna and Carly are as follows: they annoy each other, distrust each other and do not talk to each other.

62. The second to sixth paragraphs mention three ineffective ways to solve college-student disputes except arbitration.

Questions 63-65: Answer the following questions according to the passage.

63. In old schools, what did disciplinary action treat a personal conflict as?
64. What does a third party do in any kind of mediation?
65. What is the difference between mediation and arbitration?

【答案与解析】

61. F

(文章开头就提到 Anna 和 Carly 的问题, Mutually annoyed, they have become distrustful, suspecting each other of stealing small personal items and reading private correspondence.并没有提到她们互相不说话。)

62. F

(只有第三段第四段提到解决大学生纠纷无效的方法。)

63. A violation of the university rules.

(参见第三段第二句。)

64. A third party helps both sides in a conflict come up with possible solutions and a plan for implementing them.

(倒数第二段第二句提到, 第三方就是帮助出问题的双方想出有效的解决办法并贯彻落实它们。原句为 a third party—the mediator—helps both sides in a conflict come up with possible solutions and a plan for implementing them.)

65. A mediator does not propose or impose solutions, but an arbitrator does.

(最后一段提到, 调解与仲裁不一样, 调解员并不提供解决办法, 但是仲裁人提供解决方法。)

Section C (10 marks)

Questions 66-70 are based on the following passage.

To Paint Is to Live: Georgia O'Keeffe (乔治亚·欧姬芙)

(1887-1986)

Georgia O'Keeffe was truly an American original. Tough, sparse and lean, she embodied the rugged individualistic nature of the American pioneer. But instead of tilling the soil, she made her strides in the field of contemporary American art.

Born on a 600-acre farm in Sun Prairie, Wisconsin, on November 15, 1887, O'Keeffe throughout her long life preferred vast plains and open spaces to city living. From the summer of 1929, when she made her first visit to New Mexico, the starkness of the desert fascinated her. After summering in New Mexico for many years, she finally moved permanently to New Mexico, in 1949, where she continued to paint until her eyesight faltered in the late 1970s. From this region the themes of some of her finest works evolved.

O'Keeffe's strictly American art education began with private lessons at the age of ten. Teachers recognized her talent but often criticized the larger-than-life proportions that she liked to paint. At an early age, she was already moving away from realistic copying of objects to things she perceived with her own eyes, mind, and soul.

O’Keeffe’s formal high school education continued at a private school in Madison, Wisconsin, and after a family move, she graduated from a Williamsburg, Virginia, high school in 1903. From 1905 to 1906 she studied at the Art Institute in Chicago, and from 1907 to 1908, at the Art Students’ League in New York.

In 1908, perhaps disappointed with the rigidity of American art education at the time, she gave up painting and became a commercial artist, drawing advertising illustrations in Chicago. However, in the summer of 1912, she decided to take another art course in Virginia under AlonBemont, and her interest in creative painting came alive again.

After art courses from 1915 to 1916 in New York under the more liberal art teacher Arthur Dow, O’Keeffe accepted a position as an art teacher at a small college in South Carolina. It was at this point that the determined young woman isolated herself, took stock of her painting, and decided to reject the rigidity of the realism that she had been taught for a style all her own: “Nothing is less real than realism—(69) details are confusing. It is only by selection, by elimination, by emphasis, that we get the real meaning of things.” From this revival came black and white abstract nature forms in all shapes and sizes, the beginning of her highly individualistic style.

O’Keeffe sent some of her prints to a friend in New York and told her not to show them to anyone. The friend was so impressed with them that she ignored the request and took them to a famous photographer and promoter of modern artists, Alfred Stieglitz. His reaction was immediate: “At last, a woman on paper!” Without O’Keeffe’s knowledge or consent, Stieglitz exhibited these prints in his gallery. Infuriated, she went to New York to insist that he take her drawings down. Stieglitz, however, convinced her of their quality, and she allowed them to remain on exhibit. Subsequently, Stieglitz became the champion of O’Keeffe’s works and helped her gain the prominence she deserved. As art critic Lloyd Goodrich said, “Her art presents a rare combination of austerity and deep seriousness ... (70) Even at her most realistic, she is concerned not with the mere visual appearance of things, but with their essential life, their being, their identity... The forms of nature are translated into forms of art.”

Questions 66-68: Answer the following questions according to the passage.

66. What did O’Keeffe prefer to city living all her life?

67. Where did the themes of some of her finest works evolve from?

68. What can we infer from Alfred Stieglitz’s comment—“At last, a woman on paper!”—when he first saw O’Keeffe’s prints?

Questions 69-70: Translate the underlined sentences 69 and 70.

【答案与解析】

66. Vast plains and open spaces.

(第二段第一句介绍乔治亚·欧姬芙的生平时提到, O’Keeffe throughout her long life preferred vast plains and open spaces to city living. 可知答案为 Vast plains and open spaces.)

67. New Mexico.

(第二段最后一句提到, 她最出色的作品都源于新墨西哥州。原句为 From this region the themes of some of her finest works evolved.)

68. Women artists were not very common in those days.

(当 Alfred Stieglitz 第一次看到她的画时, 说“终于有位女艺术家了”, 可知当时女艺术家很少见。)

69. 细节让人迷惑, 只有通过筛选、删减和强调才能知道事物的真实意义。

(confusing 令人迷惑的。elimination 淘汰。)

70. 即使在她最写实的时候, 她关注的也不是事物单一的视觉形象, 而是事物最重要的生命、存在和个性。

(visual appearance 视觉形象。essential 最重要的。)

Section D (10 marks)

Questions 71-75 are based on the following passage.

The Psychology and Physiology of Taking Risks

Why do only some of us become risk-seekers? There must be factors at work, which is experienced by risk-seekers and by risk-avoiders alike.

On a very simple level, social rewards are high for risk-takers who triumph over adversity. The scientist who does cutting-edge research despite the possibility of ruining his or her career may discover the next great energy source or the long-sought cure for a disease. The civil rights leader who perseveres in the face of threats to life or family may open new doors for millions of downtrodden citizens. Charles Lindbergh, the postal-service pilot who focused the attention of many nations on the possibilities of long-distance flight, attained immense wealth and fame. The risk-seeker, in other words, may simply be a very goal-directed person willing to take great chances to win big rewards.

Psychologists often mention the sense of control that surviving a dangerous situation can impart. There is a great payoff for some people in facing adversity and overcoming it through superior strength and preparation. By this schema (模式), a risk-taker is not someone who recklessly seeks trouble but someone who carefully matches himself or herself against a worthy challenge. This image fits such extreme athletes as mountain-climbers or skydivers, who spend a great deal of time preparing for a dangerous ascent or a challenging jump. It does not, however, fit the teenager who recklessly speeds down a highway or the inexperienced skier who decides to take on a black-diamond slope. What explains risk-taking of this sort, which is probably best characterised as impulsive behaviour?

Psychologists in the Freudian mold would bring up the concept of a “death wish,” a deep-seated impulse to flirt with personal annihilation (灭绝). Physiologists pose several more-convincing possibilities. The tendency to be a risk-seeker depends, in this view, on factors such as one’s brain development or one’s receptivity to common brain chemicals. For example, studies of electrical patterns in the brain have shown that teenagers, as opposed to preteens and adults, exhibit more activities in the reward centres of their brains than in the planning centres. Furthermore, these reward centres are most active when the rewards appear unpredictably. This focus on instant rewards and on novelty offers a recipe for impulsive risk-taking in hopes of a chance pay-out.

Another possible factor is an enzyme called monoamine oxidase (MAO). It helps control the levels of dopamine and other chemicals in the brain so that someone whose body produces abnormally little MAO is likely to have imbalances of such chemicals in the brain. By testing individuals with a tendency toward risky behaviour, researchers have established a strong correlation between low levels of MAO and living dangerously.

Questions 71-75: Read the passage carefully and then complete each space in the summary in a maximum of three words from the passage.

Why do only some of us become risk-seekers? Firstly, social rewards are high for risk-takers who (71) _____. risk-seekers may simply be a very (72) _____ person willing to take great chances to gain big rewards. Secondly, is a great payoff for some people in facing adversity and overcoming it through great (73) _____. The third factor is a death wish. The tendency to be a risk-seeker depends, in the Freudian mold, on factors such as one's brain development or one's receptivity to common brain chemicals. Teenagers have been shown to exhibit more activities in the _____ of one's brains than in the planning centres. The last possible factor is MAO, which helps control the levels of dopamine and other chemicals in the brain so that someone whose body produces low levels of MAO is likely to have imbalances of such chemicals in the brain. (75) _____ between low levels of MAO and living dangerously has been established.

Nowadays, more and more families choose to take their children to school and pick them up after school. Almost everywhere in China you can see the phenomenon: parents are waiting anxiously for their children outside the school. So many people and vehicles are crowded at the gate that the area looks like a market. Different people hold different opinions about this “Chinese style” educational phenomenon. Some people think it is necessary, while others hold the opposite view. What’s your opinion on the phenomenon? Write an essay in at least 120 words on the answer sheet.

【参考范文】

Nowadays, in China more and more parents choose to send their children to school and pick them up after school. People hold different views about this “Chinese style” educational phenomenon.

Some people think it is necessary, because the safety of children is the priority. There are many vehicles on the roads and traffic accidents frequently occur around us. However, others hold the opposite view. They think more people and cars at the gate of school will cause traffic jams, and even some new traffic accidents.

In my opinion, only with the joint efforts of the whole society can the problems be solved. Schools should teach students to obey the traffic regulations. And related government departments should also take urgent and effective measures to maintain social order, which can make the social environment more safe and civilized. Besides, parents should try to let their children go to school by themselves when they get older. This can help them form independent characters.
