Part IV Reading Comprehension (35 marks)

Read the following passages. Each passage is followed by several questions. Respond to the questions using information from the passage. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

Section A (5 marks)

Questions 56—60 are based on the following passage.

Do you know anyone who feels awkward at a party or hates to be in a crowd of people? They're probably just shy, but if they get really frightened, they may be suffering from a phobia. A phobia is a fear of a certain thing controlling you, rather than you controlling it. The three most common are claustrophobia (fear of closed spaces), agoraphobia (fear of public places) and social phobia (fear of social occasions like parties). Three young people tell us how they manage to fight their fears.

A. Alice Brown

I'm absolutely terrified of heights. I can't even bring myself to climb to the top of a small hill. There's a lift in Toronto, with a glass floor. It goes up the outside of a really high building and you can see everything below getting smaller and smaller. Just thinking of this lift makes me go cold and sometimes gives me nightmares. I'd like to face up to my phobia and I try by telling myself that I'm not frightened of the real situation, I'm only frightened by the idea of it. Once you realize that, you can fight the fear.

B. Joan Peterson

I think I'm a bit worried by nature and I dread anything happening to me or my family. I think this is why I can't stand the sound of sirens. Even when I hear an ambulance or a police siren on TV, it makes me feel strange and I start to panic. I do relaxation and deep-breathing exercises which help me feel calm. My mother gave me the idea of counting to ten, by which time the noise has usually stopped.

C. Peter Holmes

I'm scared of spiders. Even very small spiders and plastic spiders frighten me. I can't even look at a picture of one without imagining that it's crawling up my leg. It makes my hands go sweaty. I'm going to get over it, though. For now, I just tell myself that spiders aren't capable of hurting me. I'm looking forward to the day when I can pick up a spider, look at it, and say "You don't terrify me anymore!"

So, if you find yourself feeling afraid or short of breath, if you feel like running away or you can't move because you're so scared, don't let it get you down! Take a deep breath, tell yourself that you're going to get over the fear, and you'll succeed in doing so!

Questions 56—60

Complete the table with no more than three words from the passage.

Name	Example of Phobia	Reaction	Solution
Alice Brown	Terrified of (56) _____	Going cold and sometimes having nightmares	Telling herself that she's not frightened of the real situation, only frightened by the idea of it.
Joan Peterson	Can't stand the sound of (57) _____	Feeling strange and starting to panic	Doing relaxation and (58) _____ to feel calm, and counting to ten.
Peter Holmes	Scared of spiders	Making hands (59) _____	Telling himself that spiders aren't (60) _____ hurting him.

Section B(10 marks)

Questions 61—65 are based on the following passage.

(61) ____ There are a few small differences in the grammar and there are a few words that are different on either side of Atlantic, but the big difference is the accent. Some British films have subtitles in America because people can't understand what the actors are saying, and some American TV series are difficult for the British to understand.

(62) ____ The problems are with the different kinds of American and British English. These different dialects and accents depend on people's social class and the geographical area where they live. It is possible, for example, that a middle-class speaker from the south of England will find it difficult to understand a working-class speaker from the north. In the same way, a wealthy Californian may not understand a working-class New Yorker. All of these people have accents, but the middle-class accents are usually closer to Standard English.

(63) ____ What sort of English should they learn? Is American English better than British English, or the other way round? The answer depends on their reasons for learning English. If they are learning English for their work, the choice will probably be easy. But for many students, it doesn't matter. What matters is that they understand and are understood.

(64) ____ Most English that you hear and see around the world is spoken or written by non-native speakers—between, for example, a Greek and a German, or between a Russian and an Italian. English is the main language of business, academic conferences and tourism, of popular music, home computers and video games. English has become the Latin of the modern world.

(65) ____ More and more people now talk about English as an International Language—a language that is not American or British. It has hundreds of different accents, but if people can understand what you are saying, no problem.

Questions 61—65

Complete the passage with the following sentences. There are two extra sentences that you do not need to use.

- A. With so many different Englishes, it is difficult for learners of the language.
- B. Because of this, the question of American or British English is becoming less and less important.
- C. The British and the Americans like to talk about the differences between British and American English.
- D. How many new words enter the English language every year?
- E. The world is changing and English is no longer the property of the British, Americans or Australians.
- F. Historically, English has had a lot of contact with speakers of many other languages.
- G. However, if you listen to Standard English in Britain or the US, there are no problems of understanding at all.

Section C(10 marks)

Questions 66—70 are based on the following passage.

How come it is so difficult to find English food in England? In France you eat French food, in Italy Italian food, but in England, in any High Street in the land, it is easier to find Indian and Chinese restaurants than English ones. In London you can eat Thai, Swiss, Spanish and Italian, but where are the English restaurants?

It is not only in restaurants that foreign dishes are replacing traditional British food. In every supermarket, sales of pasta and pizza are booming. Why has this happened? What is wrong with the cooks of Britain that they prefer cooking pasta to potatoes? Why do they now like cooking in wine and olive oil? But perhaps it is a good thing. After all, this is the 21st century and we can get ingredients from all over the world in just a few hours. Anyway, wasn't English food always disgusting and tasteless? The answer is "No". To understand this, we have to go back to before World War II.

The British have always imported food from abroad. From the time of the Roman invasion foreign trade was a major influence on British cooking. English kitchens, like the English language, absorbed ingredients from all over the world. Another important influence was the weather. The British rain gives them rich soil and green grass. It means that they are able to produce some of the finest varieties of meat, fruit and vegetables.

However, World War II changed everything. Wartime women had to forget 600 years of British cooking, learn to do without foreign imports and ration their use of home-grown food.

The Ministry of Food published cheap, boring recipes. Britain never managed to recover from the wartime attitude to food. They were left with a loss of confidence in their cooking skills and after years of Ministry recipes they began to believe that British food was boring, and they searched the world for new dishes. The British people became tourists at their own dining tables and in the restaurants of their land! This is a tragedy! Surely food is as much as a part of their culture as their landscape, their language, and their literature. Nowadays, cooking British food is like speaking a dead language.

However, there is still one small ray of hope. British pubs are often the best places to eat well and cheaply in Britain, and they also increasingly try to serve tasty British food.

Questions 66—70

Answer the following questions according to the passage.

66. Is it easy to find English food in England?
67. What had a great influence on British cooking?
68. When did British food start to change?
69. What does British culture include, besides British food?
70. Where can people still have British food?

Section D(10 marks)

Questions 71—75 are based on the following passage.

These days, college lecture halls in the United States are being filled more and more with female rather than male students. Women now make up 55 percent of the college population— and that number continues to rise.

Forty years ago, male students were the majority on college campuses in the United States. Traditionally men acted as the breadwinner of the family and college was seen as the path to career advancement and higher salaries. But during the feminist movements of the 1970s, more women aspired to having careers and enrolled in college to pursue a degree. By the mid-1980s, more women than men were attending college.

At the same time, there was a decline in the number of males applying to college. Educators are uncertain of the cause of this decline, but it continues to affect enrollment numbers for men in higher education.

According to the National Center for Education Statistics, males leave or are kicked out of high school in higher numbers than females. And male students are three times more likely to be placed in special education programs. Author Christina Hoff Sommers attributes the drop in male enrollment to early stereotyping of boys as “aggressive” and “non-academic”.

Others believe the drop in male enrollment can be attributed to the growing number of men seeking jobs in repair, construction, and technology. These are careers that often don’t require a four-year degree from a university but still promise good salaries.

The effect of there being more women than men at colleges has created some noticeable changes. The higher number of female students has led to more diverse classes and programs offered at universities. And at a graduation time, one may notice a difference in what types of university degrees are awarded to men and women. While women earn a higher percentage of bachelor’s and master’s degrees, men still earn a higher percentage of doctorate degrees. But fewer men on campus haven’t changed the male/female ratios in some majors. There are still fewer women in fields such as math, engineering, science and computers.

To increase male enrollment, some schools have formed partnership with male mentoring groups to encourage younger students to aim for college. Others have modified their recruiting and admissions policies, sending out extra mailings to boys and paying closer attention to male candidates. One female junior complained, “It’s not fair that a boy would get extra weight over a girl, but it would be better if there were more boys on campus.” The dilemma presents a challenge for colleges: How can a school attempt to close the gender gap in ways that ensure that both men and women have equal access to opportunities in universities?

Questions 71—75

Complete the summary with a maximum of two words from the passage, changing the form where necessary.

Universities in the United States currently have more female students than male students. Since the 1970s, more woman have chosen to pursue (71) _____, while the number of men enrolling in university (72) _____. Some researchers attribute this to discrimination against boys in high school.

Other researchers believe that the drop in enrollment is because more men can find jobs with (73) _____ that don't require a university degree. Although the growing number of women has led to more diverse courses at universities, administrators would like to have more men enrolled. Universities now face (74) _____. How can they recruit more boys while at the same time (75) _____ equal opportunity to girls at universities?

【录音原文】

M: It's great to have you with us today, Jenny. So, how did you start travelling?

W: Well, as a child, I travelled a lot with my family. We did some fantastic trips, like cycling through Europe, when I was 13. By the time I was 16 I had visited 19 countries!

M: And how did you start writing?

W: When I travelled I always wrote a diary. I didn't want to forget all the things that I had seen and experienced. So I wrote it all down. At first, it was just facts. Then I added my feelings and stories about the places and the people.

M: It's sometimes difficult to get started as a writer. What was your first “break” as a travel writer?

W: It was luck. I had lived in Turkey for about two years. Then a friend of mine, who worked for a travel company, said he needed someone to write a travel guide about Turkey. So I did it! Other writing jobs just came from that.

M: And when you're writing, what's the most difficult thing?

W: When I get home from travelling, I have notebooks full of notes. I often feel like writing about everything. The most difficult thing is deciding what to include and what to leave out.

M: What advice would you give to someone thinking of being a travel writer?

W: Firstly, read as many books as you can. Secondly, take notes of as many details as you can when you're travelling. Finally, go for it!

M: Thank you, Jenny.

M: Yes, I'm good at reading maps and even my wife would agree.

W: But women are better at other things, like remembering faces. That's according to this research. By the way, do you know how much the average human brain weighs?

M: I really don't know.

W: It's 1.4 kilograms. This compares with the average of 7 kilograms for whales and 1.4 kilograms for dolphins. Albert Einstein's brain was only 1.2 kilograms; that's lower than average, so size isn't everything.

M: Yes.

W: This research was conducted by a team from the University of Pennsylvania in the US. They looked at the brains of nearly 1,000 men and women and found they were wired differently.

M: What's the difference?

W: They found that in males, the stronger connections run within each hemisphere. In women the stronger connections are between the two sides of the brain.

M: So men have better links. Women have stronger connections between each side. But what does that mean?

W: Well, they say these differences might explain why men are better at learning and performing a single task, like cycling or navigating, and why women are often better at multi-tasking. The research also showed women are better at remembering words, faces and information about other people, and they also have longer attention spans.

M: It's very interesting.

【录音原文】

Some universities in the UK are disappointed by the poor levels of literacy and numeracy among undergraduates. Most of the lecturers at top British universities say that the majority of school-leavers have got a “fear of numbers” and poor grammar. These concerns are supported by the results of a survey conducted by the Nuffield Review.

The survey approached over half of the universities in the UK, and interviewed around 250 lecturers and admissions tutors. The results of the survey are worrying. Although the vast majority of students pass their secondary school exams, a small minority still require additional help with English and maths at university. A few universities offer courses ranging from remedial maths to essay writing because of the problem. No one from the universities surveyed believed that the English and maths standards of undergraduates are acceptable.

The people surveyed gave different theories for the decline in spelling and writing standards. Some lecturers at universities blame computers and the Internet. Computers have spellcheckers, calculators and spreadsheets, so students don't have to check their work for themselves. One tutor added, “Students copy essays from the Internet. Reading books is a lost skill”. Also, some experts suggest a link between low reading levels and an increase in time spent watching TV. They argue that people have got little time for anything else because they're watching so much TV.

【参考范文】

According to the chart, British people between 35 and 44 are the happiest, but the least happy ones are those beyond 65. Maybe this is because the middle age of British people have had a stable job and earned enough money to enjoy a comfortable life, so they'll have less worry and be happier. However, after 65, as British people grow old, they'll be lack of sense of security, because they usually leave from their occupations and have no children around them. What's more, the weather may also contribute to the gloomy mood of old people.

【参考范文】

Recently, many TV programs' themes are based on Chinese poetry or idioms, making people pay more attention to the traditional culture. In my opinion, this is a good sign. Traditional culture shouldn't be forgotten.

In the long history of China, Chinese have created a unique and abundant treasury of culture, which shouldn't be thrown away. First, for individuals, learning about traditional culture will greatly improve their cultural literacy. Then, Chinese traditional culture shows us where we originated from and makes our nation prosperous. A nation with no emphasis on its culture is bound to perish. Last but not least, traditional culture is our nation's card on the world stage. In order to have cultural communication with other countries, it is indispensable.

All in all, people should never forget our traditional culture, because it is an essential part of our nation.
