Part IV Reading Comprehension (30 marks)

There are three passages in this Part. Each passage is followed by several questions. Respond to the questions using information from the passage. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

Section A (10 marks)

Questions 56 to 60 are based on the following passage.

Most people associate tears with people who are crying because they are upset, angry or extremely happy, but there are actually three different kinds of tears.

Firstly there are basal tears. These are tears regularly produced by the tear glands which are above your eyes, under the eyelids, and protect the eyes by keeping them clean and wet. Basal tears are spread over the eye by blinking. They are made up of a mixture of water, oil and mucus (粘液).

But there are other tears which have no connection with emotions either. These tears also protect the eyes. So how are they different? The second kind of tears are called reflex tears and their job is to wash out foreign objects that come into contact with the eye - when an eyelash or an insect gets stuck in your eye, for example. Reflex tears can also be caused by the smell of onions or smoke, which contain chemicals and tiny particles. In addition, cold air or wind, which dries out the eyes, causes the tear glands to produce reflex tears. In English we often say our eyes are“watering” when this happens.

And then there are“real” tears- emotional tears. They are produced by emotional stress or pain and have been found to contain more hormones than other types of tears. Most mammals produce basal or reflex tears, but we humans produce emotional tears.

Emotional tears and reflex tears also come from the tear glands. Some of the tears drain away through the tear ducts in the corner of your eyes. But when too many tears are produced, they roll down your face. Your tear ducts are also connected to your nose, which is why tears sometimes run down into it. Both reflex tears and emotional tears are more watery than basal tears.

What is the function of emotional tears? Studies indicate that our bodies use them as a way of re-establishing balance of the nervous system. They are a way for us to calm down after a period of stress. Research across cultures also indicates that emotional tears help people to establish a bond with people they care for. Tears express vulnerability and most people react with sympathy to tears.

Questions 56 to 60

Section B (10 marks)

Questions 61 to 65 are based on the following passage.

In 1791, George Washington picked the site of the nation's capital- Washington, D.C. He also chose the spot where the President's house would be built. The “Father of the Country” never saw the completed building, though. When he died in 1799, the walls and roof were just about finished. President John Adams and his wife, Abigail, were the first to live there.

The Adamses arrived in Washington, D.C. in November of 1800. Stunned by what they saw, they tried to remain calm. Mud and rubble covered the grounds of their new home. A bridge of planks led from the roadway to the front door. All around the mansion stood the workers' shacks. Washington was a village of some 40 houses, not the big city we know today.

At least the President's house was finished on the outside. Inside, everything was incomplete. Many of the walls had not been plastered. The central staircase was unfinished. The floors were rough boards. There was no indoor bathroom. The furniture was inadequate, too. There wasn't nearly enough, and in the huge rooms the furniture looked like dollhouse furniture.

Congress thought it had spent enough on the mansion. Abigail felt that much had been left undone. She complained that there were no lamps or mirrors. Compared with her cozy home in Boston.

Massachusetts, this was cold and damp, and the firewood supply was insufficient to keep her 13 fireplaces burning and her rooms warm. To dry laundry, the first lady had to string up a clothesline in the huge East Room.

In private, Abigail Adams complained about the living arrangements. In public, however, she praised the location of the house. After all, the huge building was the center of a new city springing up in the wilderness. With a sparkling new coat of white paint, "the white house" shone like a gem even against the drabest surroundings. Built on a rise, it had sweeping views of hills, forests, and the Potomac River. Indeed it seemed to hover above the earth rather than being sunk, as it actually was, into the side of a hill.

Abigail Adams was a smart woman. She realized the White House as it is now called—would have a great future. She knew that her present living conditions would soon change for the better "This house," she wrote to a relative. "is built for ages to come."

Questions 61 to 65

Answer the following questions with the information given in the passage

61. Who chose the spot where the President's house would be built?
62. How did the Adamses feel when they saw their new home?
63. Where did Abigail live before she came to the new mansion?
64. What did Abigail do to dry laundry in the new mansion?
65. Why did Abigail praise the location of the house?

Section C (10 marks)

Questions 66 to 70 are based on the following passage

Is there life anywhere in the universe other than on Earth? To answer that question, scientists look at outer space through telescopes. They send up rockets and satellites and study the information that comes back. Scientists also study life forms on Earth. They think about the features on Earth that support life. Every answer helps them to know what to look for in outer space.

Researchers have learned that two things are required to keep life going on Earth. They are energy and flowing water. All life forms need water to survive. It takes energy to keep water in its liquid state, however. Earth's energy comes from the sun. Our source for water is rain and snow, which are collected by oceans, lakes, rivers and streams.

What places in our solar system are likely to have energy to keep water in a liquid state? The answer to that question is unknown, but scientists have some ideas. They are looking very closely at the planet Mars. Although the atmosphere of Mars is very different from Earth's atmosphere, it does have water. Martian air holds only about 1/1000 as much water as Earth's air. Even that small amount can produce clouds, fog, and frost—all filled with water. The greatest problem with keeping water in a liquid state on Mars is the planet's extreme cold. The average temperature on Mars is -81 degrees Fahrenheit. The warmest it gets is 68 degrees Fahrenheit, and the coldest recorded temperature is -220 degrees Fahrenheit!

Life may also be possible on Europa, one of the moons of the planet Jupiter (木星). Scientists believe that Europa may have liquid water and volcanoes. The heat from volcanoes may keep oceans from freezing. Scientists are planning missions to Jupiter and Europa to bring back samples of surface ice. They suspect that if there is life on Europa, it may exist in an ice-covered ocean. They believe that deep below the ice, hot springs in the ocean floor heat the water.

Scientists also look at life on Earth to ponder questions about life in outer space. Life forms have adapted to some remarkably harsh conditions. Creatures too tiny to be seen with the human eye live in ice-covered Antarctic lakes and in steaming hot springs. Infrequently, small creatures can even be found in the dry centres of rocks. The existence of these life forms suggests that some very harsh places can support life. As scientists unlock the secrets of how living things survive on this planet, they come closer to answering questions about life forms elsewhere in our solar system and beyond.

Questions 66 to 70

Complete the summary below with information from the passage, using no more than three words for each blank.

Scientists use (66)_____ and space missions to study outer space to determine if there is life beyond Earth. After looking at life forms on Earth, scientists believe that living things need (67)_____ and energy. The planet (68)_____ has water, while Jupiter's moon Europa may have liquid water and (69)_____. It's amazing that life exists on Earth in places as frozen as Antarctica. Scientists continue to look closely at (70)_____ that support life on Earth for clues to where life may exist in other parts of the universe.

Part V Translation(15 marks)

Section A (5 marks)

Translate the following paragraph into Chinese. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

71. Finding the right light is one of the main challenges of photographing nature. Experts suggest taking photographs primarily when the weather is overcast. If you shoot when there are clouds in the sky, your images will have more intense colours. Another problem nature photographers sometimes have is finding the right background. Looking for subjects in environments without any man-made structures will interfere with the image. Experts advise photographers to find locations where there are no fences or buildings .

Section B(10 marks)

Translate the underlined sentences in the passage into English by using the hints given in brackets. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

很多人选择礼物时经常纠结价格。你该不该多花点钱来证明你有多在乎呢？

72. 研究显示，多花钱并不总能保证你买到受欢迎的礼物 (guarantee)。研究发现，礼物越贵重，送礼者就越期待收礼者感激。73. 并没有证据表明，收礼者对礼物的喜欢程度和价格有关 (recipient, be associated with)。

美国营销学副教授杰夫·盖拉克说过，送对礼物的诀窍在于，不要只想到送礼的瞬间，要把目光放长远些。

他说：“送礼人在选购礼物时，为了看到收礼者脸上的笑容会很重视送礼瞬间。但是收礼者在乎的是长远来看自己能从礼物中得到多少价值。”

盖拉克还指出，不要一心只想送独一无二的礼物。74. 有时候许多人想要的东西或者许多其他人拥有的东西也许正是某人想要的礼物 (定语从句)。有研究显示，我们在选购礼物时，往往会关注收礼者的个性。但是这种高度特异性让我们忽略了他们其他方面的需求，这也许会导致最后送出的礼物不那么令人满意。75. 我们也倾向于为不同的人买不同的礼物，即使他们可能都喜欢同样的东西 (tend to)。

盖拉克说，为了做到“尽善尽美”，人们错误地认为自己需要送出多样化的礼物，即便代价是放弃最佳礼物。你在选购礼物时可能也会跳过自己拥有的东西，因为你不想有损自己的个性。

加拿大英属哥伦比亚大学心理学教授伊丽莎白·邓恩说：“为了选购到更好的礼物，你可以先从你和收礼者的共同点着手。” 76. 她建议到，你应该基于你们的共同点来挑选礼物 (in common)。也就是说，如果你想送更好的礼物，你可以想想两个人的共同兴趣是什么，然后据此购买体验式礼物。研究显示，体验式礼物能让你和收礼者的心靠得更近，即使你没有和收礼者一起体验这份礼物。

But it isn't only the ingredients that changes, ways of preparing food can depend on geography too. In New Zealand, a land with more than 60 volcano, the Maori use a method called hāngi to prepare food. They use volcanic rocks to cook the food underground. They dig a large hole where they make $\wedge$ fire to heat the rocks. The food goes on the rocks, they close the hole and wait for four or five hours until the food to cook. If you walked by a cooking hāngi, you wouldn't even know it was there! You can't even smell the food cooked.

But we can't always wait four or five hours for our food. With our busy modern lifestyles, street food is the obvious answer and each country has their traditional street food. In Sicily, in southern Italy, traditional street food is a ball of fried rice called an arancino. The centre of the ball is filled with a rich tomato and meat sauce. It is just as deliciously as a bowl of pasta or a slice of pizza.

Part I Listening Comprehension

Section A

In this section, you will hear five short conversations. Each conversation will be read only once. At the end of each conversation, one question will be asked, and you have fifteen seconds to read the four choices marked A, B, C and D, and decide which is the best answer. Then mark the corresponding letter on the answer sheet with a single line through the centre.

1. W: Have you heard about the big fire last night?

M: Yeah, is it true that everyone survived?

W: Yes. There was a couple on the second floor and two women and three kids on the ground floor. But no one was badly hurt. A miracle, isn't it?

M: It is indeed.

Q: How many people were caught in the fire?

2. W: Before I go for the dinner, I need to take my medicine.

M: Are you still having those headaches?

W: No, this medicine is for my ear infection.

M: Just don't take the medicine on an empty stomach, you'll get a stomachache!

Q: For what is the woman taking the medicine?

3. M: How are you doing on that short story for your Creative Writing class?

W: Ah! I'm having some problem! I can't figure out how I want to end it.

M: Well, let's go get a burger. Sometimes the best ideas come when you're not thinking about them.

W: I would love a break. But I'm not hungry yet. Maybe we could just go for a walk around the campus, or for a cup of coffee?

M: I'd rather not drink coffee at this late hour.

W: Good point. OK. Let me just get my jacket because it's a bit chilly outside, and then we can go.

Q: What are the speakers going to do?

4. W: Who do you think should get the job?

M: What's your opinion?

W: How about Mr. Johnson?

M: Johnson? I'm not sure. He's a nice fellow, of course, and easy to get along with. But I doubt his professional expertise. I want someone who can get the job done.

Q: What do you learn from the conversation about Mr. Johnson?

5. W: How come Jack is so popular on campus? Students all stop and congratulate him.

M: He scored the winning goal in the state football championships. It was reported in all local newspapers and on TV. The fuss should die down soon. It's just his 15 minutes of fame.

W: Unless he likes the attention. He may go professional and be famous his whole life!

M: I don't think so. He really wants to be an engineer when he graduates. But who knows. Right now he needs to focus on being a full-time student.

Q: What does Jack want to be when he graduates from college?

Section B

In this section, you will hear two long conversations. Each conversation will be read only once. At the end of each conversation, there will be a one-minute pause. During the pause, read the questions and make your answers on the answer sheet with a single line through the centre.

Conversation One

Listen to the conversation, mark each statement as either true (T) or false (F) according to what you hear.

W: Hello, I'm looking for someone who can help me with my identification card.

M: I can help you. What's the problem? Is it not letting you into buildings anymore? You know, sometimes if you leave the card close to a magnet, the card readers can't read it.

W: No, actually. I seem to have misplaced my card somewhere. But I'm almost sure that it's in my room somewhere. I just don't have the time to look for it now because I have a laboratory session all afternoon. So I was wondering if I could have a temporary card or something until I find my own.

M: Oh, I'm so sorry, but we can't issue temporary cards. It's just too risky to have that many ID cards around campus, especially since we use them for many things. You use it to get into buildings, to eat at the cafeteria. Anyway, we'll just have to get you a new one.

W: Oh, but I don't want to have to pay for a new one if I know that I haven't lost mine.

M: I'm really sorry, but you'll have to purchase a replacement. The bright side is this's the first time you've had to replace your card, and it will only cost you five dollars. After that, it's ten dollars if you have to replace it again.

W: The thing is I've lost it twice. And I know it's not lost this time. It has to be somewhere in my room.

M: To be honest, you don't have much of a choice. Once a card is reported missing, we're required by university policy to deactivate it. It's just what we have to do to protect the students.

W: OK, I guess I can see that. What information do you need to deactivate it?

M: Just your name.

W: It's Olivia Bentham.

M: OK, your old card is now deactivated. Now let me make you a new one. It's ten dollars. You can pay with cash or put it on your student account.

W: I'll pay for it with cash.

Conversation Two

Listen to the conversation, mark each question as A, B, C or D according to what you hear.

W: David, what do you like and dislike about your job?

M: At the beginning it was very exciting, knowing that my opinions and experiences would end up in print. Also researching a book forced me to explore places I might not visit. However, it can get lonely. Sometimes I spend three or four months travelling on my own without the opportunity to hang around and form relationships. Every time I get back, I say to myself “never again”. The next eight or nine months back at home, writing can be a pretty intense experience too.

W: Doesn't it feel like you're on holiday?

M: When you're abroad, it's the opposite of a holiday—you get up early and don't stop all day. Everything you see and feel may sink into the book, so it's important to note down all the details. It's enjoyable but absolutely exhausting, and when you're really tired, it's easy to get ill.

W: Do you try to remain undercover as much as possible?

M: Yes, but it's not always possible. I've done several books on Goa, and I'm pretty well known there. I try not to tell restaurants to avoid special treatment, but being known can sometimes be advantageous. Chatting with hotel bosses can give me local details that make a guide seem less like it's written by someone just passing through. I also get a lot of people asking to be included, but you have to write a dependable book, and that comes first.

W: What qualities do you think to be a good guidebook writer?

M: It's essential that you enjoy going to new places and gathering information. You should be like a sponge, absorbing all sorts of cultural and sociological information. And you must love language. Mainly, though, you need to cope with being on your own and be able to put up with not having much money.

W: Is the pay that bad?

M: Yes! You get a portion of your royalties in advance, which just covers your expenses on the trip, but not much more. After that it just depends on how many people buy the book.

Section C

In this section, you will hear five short news items. Each item will be read only once. After each item, there will be a fifteen-second pause. During the pause, read the question and the four choices marked A, B, C and D, and decide which is the best answer. Then mark the corresponding letter on the answer sheet with a single line through the centre.

16. According to China Daily, the so-called “996” work schedule, in which employees work from 9 am to 9 pm, six days a week, spread from IT to other industries. Some companies may even demand more overtime. In a 2018 study, more than 80 percent of Chinese employees said they were overworked and under mental and physical stress. This can cause depression, weight gain and sleep deprivation, which lower work productivity.

17. Scientists are investigating a massive die-off of the shellfish mussels in the Clinch River in southeastern United States. Scientists blame this on pollution, habitat loss and climate change. But they suspect the most recent decreases have another cause. Richard, a biologist, and his team believe an infectious disease could be responsible. The team is comparing healthy mussels with dying ones in an attempt to narrow down a list of possible diseases.
18. Researchers at the Royal Botanic Gardens and Stockholm University recently found that at least 571 plant species have gone extinct since 1750. The figure was calculated when scientist Rafael Govaerts reviewed all publications on plant extinctions over more than 30 years and found the number to be four times more than the current listing of extinct plants. It's also twice the number of all bird and mammal extinctions combined.
19. The 2019 reading of a survey on audience satisfaction with Chinese films screened during the year was 84.3 points out of a total of 100, a five-year record high, said the China Film Art Research Centre. Launched in early 2015, the China film audience satisfaction survey is a film evaluation system independent of the China film box office. Methods of on-site sample surveys at theatres, online surveys of film industry workers and experts and big data analysis were adopted to evaluate domestic films.
20. In New Delhi, the smog was at its worst in November, 2019. Government officials have taken steps to control the pollution. They stopped work at construction sites and limited the number of cars that were allowed on the road. But experts said, this wasn't likely to have a major effect on the smog because a lot of it came from outside New Delhi. Around the time of year when temperatures drop, India's farmers light fires to get rid of leftover crops. That produces a lot of pollution that settles over New Delhi.

Section D

In this section, you will hear two short passages. The passages will be read only once. After each passage, there will be a one-minute pause. During the pause, write the answers on the answer sheet.

Dictation

Listen to the passage. For questions 21—25, fill in the blanks with the exact words or phrases you hear.

The 24 solar terms, a system considered to be China's fifth great invention, were added to the world's intangible cultural heritage list in November, 2016. The system was based on people's observations of the sun's motion throughout the year and its influence on climate, mostly carried out on the lower reaches of the Yellow River where Chinese civilization was born. The system was completely established during the Qin and Han Dynasties. It was crucial to agricultural events such as when to sow seeds and when to harvest. Today, it is still of great help for people to better prepare their bodies for the changes of climate.

As the first solar term, Start of Spring lifts the curtain of spring. When Start of Spring arrives, days get longer and sunlight gets warmer. Temperature, the length of sunlight and the amount of rainfall are all at the turning points of the year. Similar to crops, human bodies also start a new round of growth from this day. People should open the windows more frequently to allow the air to circulate and take more physical exercises to enhance their immunity. An old Chinese saying goes like this, "Spring begins and rain arrives. Get up early and sleep late.” It is to remind the farmers the annual farming is about to begin.

It is believed that if someone can make an egg stand on the day of Start of Spring, he will have good luck in the future. According to astronomers and physicists, setting an egg upright has nothing to do with time, but with mechanics.

Spring is also the best season for kite-flying. As a traditional folk activity, it has a history of more than 2,000 years. It can help build one's health and prevent diseases. It also has the effect of promoting blood circulation and speeding up metabolism.

Summary

Listen to the passage. For questions 26—30, complete the notes using no more than three words for each blank.

Stefani Germanotta, better known as Lady Gaga, is famous for her extravagant style. She has always been different, and she says that's why she was bullied when she was at secondary school. Gaga has told the media that other pupils made fun of her for being ugly, being fat, having a big nose, being annoying, having a funny laugh and being weird. She was also constantly asked why she liked singing, why she was keen on theatre and why she did her make-up the way she did. Gaga has said that sometimes it got so bad she didn't even want to go to school.

Since then Lady Gaga has become rich, famous and successful for some of the things she was once bullied about, so she decided to try and help young people who found themselves in the situation she was in at school. In 2011, she and her mother Cynthia started a non-profit organization called Born This Way Foundation (BTWF). Its aim is to build a society where people accept each other's differences and individuality. Gaga wants to bring young people together to create a new kind of community, based on three things: safety, the skills and opportunities to make a kinder, braver world.

For many teenagers who are bullied, home is no escape because the bullying continues online. Lady Gaga has met Barack Obama to discuss action against cyber-bullying, and also demands more moderators on social media sites.

Born This Way Foundation has been helping young people to set up “Born Brave” school and community groups. The aim of these groups is to encourage young people to be more tolerant. The charity wants everyone to feel safe in their community, school, home, wherever they live, and to develop the skills they need to live in peace with other people.

This is the end of the listening part. Please transfer your answers to the answer sheet.
