There are more than 19,000 people per square mile in the small nation of Singapore. People on the island work an average of 70 hours per week. The country has strict laws, for example, (21) _____, graffiti, and even for not flushing a toilet. But according to the World Database of Happiness, Singapore is the happiest country in Asia. Why?

One reason for Singapore's happiness is that the government provides (22) _____, such as jobs and housing. There is almost no poverty, and Singapore has one of the lowest levels of unemployment in the world. The government creates jobs for people who are unemployed. It "tops up" poorer people's income so everyone can have a (23) _____ standard living. The government also offers tax breaks to people who look after aging parents. This may be why 84 percent of older people live with their children. The result is a lot of closely connected families with roughly equal standards of living.

People may not all be happy about laws, but they are generally happy with the results—they don't step in litter, the public toilets work, and the streets are safe and clean. So for Singaporeans, it seems that living in a (24) _____, clean, and safe place may be more important than having a lot of personal freedom. As Dr. Tan Ern Ser of Singapore's Institute of Policy Studies explains, "If you are (25) _____ of getting what you want in life, then you are happy."

Summary

Listen to the passage. For questions 26—30, complete the notes using no more than three words for each blank.

The passage describes how (26) _____ is the main reason why people lose their temper at work, and it offers advice to help employees deal with a difficult boss. It explains how some managers use anger as a management (27) _____ in order to make employees (28) _____ them. Some bosses may bully new staff to see how they react. It is important to work out why your boss is (29) _____, so that you can try to avoid it. If this doesn't work, and your boss goes crazy, the passage suggests that you take deep breaths to help (30) _____ your breathing, and this will help you calm down.

Part III Cloze (10 marks)

Read the following passage and fill in each blank with one word. Choose the correct word in one of the following three ways: according to the context, by using the correct form of the given word, or by using the given letter(s) of the word. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

If you happen to be shopping in the Ginza district of Tokyo, you might get a message on your mobile phone telling you which of the shops you're near has a sale on at the (46) mo_____. But do the shops know how to contact you? How do they know where you are?

The answer is RFID—radio frequency identification. RFID is in many ways a great idea. How does it work? Tiny computer chips (or "tags") are (47) _____ (attach) to objects, clothes or packaging. These chips can be read by a central computer network. If you want to find your lost dog or to research the movements of ants, RFID is very (48) _____ (help). This is what researchers at Bristol University (49) _____ in 2009. Just put the tag on the animal and watch from a safe (50) dis_____. RFID has commercial uses too. Delta Airlines uses it to track luggage and the US Department of Defense uses it to count its weapons and vehicles.

So how can RFID be used in (51) adv_____? Well, imagine your clothes have an RFID tag. Every time you enter the shopping mall a scanner “reads” your name, age and buying habits. It knows which shampoo you buy, which bread you prefer. The scanner then uses this information to target you (52) _____ special offers. Just a few years ago, this sounded like science fiction, but it’s becoming more and more common.

So, what is the problem? The problem is that great technology is often used for less great (53) pur_____. RFID could easily be used to track people instead of products. The boss may decide to track his workers—to see (54) _____ spends their time smoking outside or taking long lunch breaks. The government may want to see which books you are reading or which political gatherings you are attending. As all shoppers know, everything costs something. The cost of RFID may be your (55) _____(private).

Part IV Reading Comprehension (30 marks)

There are three passages in this part. Each passage is followed by several questions. Respond to the questions using information from the passage. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

Section A (10 marks)

Questions 56—60 are based on the following passage.

Newspapers and television reports around the world show Africa as a continent with many problems. They focus on the wars, the starving children, the terrible diseases, and the natural disasters. Other, more positive aspects of life in Africa are rarely shown.

There are, indeed, serious problems in many parts of Africa. (56) _____ These wars are in part due to historical competitions among tribes. However, in the past, the fighting was local and small in scale. In recent years, it has become far more violent and destructive. This is partly because of the destructive power of modern weapons. It is also because the situation has changed dramatically.

Starting in the sixteenth century, European powers began to move into Africa. They took African people to sell as slaves in North and South America. They also took any valuable resources they could find, such as ivory, gold, or diamonds. In the nineteenth century, the European rulers divided up the continent into countries. (57) _____

When the countries of Africa became independent in the twentieth century, there were often several different tribes in a country, and each tribe wanted to rule. The result was conflict and civil war. (58) _____ Governing means having not only power, but also access to wealth. In recent years, it has also meant having control over international aid and, therefore, access to food in times of starvation.

(59) _____ Countries that are at war have little time or resources to deal with poverty, hunger, or disease. They are unable to take any measures for a better future, and so many countries are becoming poorer and their problems are growing. For example, HIV has spread rapidly in Africa because of the lack of education, health care and medical supplies. Other diseases, many preventable, have spread quickly for the same reasons.

(60) _____ Ordinary people in many countries are joining together to change and improve their lives. Young and talented Africans are looking out to the rest of the world. They are experimenting with ways to use the Internet and other new technology to try to solve some of their problems. In the arts, and especially in music, many talented performers are showing the world what it means to be African.

Questions 56—60

Complete the passage with the following sentences. There are two extra sentences that you do not need to use.

- A. In spite of these problems, however, many Africans are in the hope of having a good future.

B. Until then, a small minority of white people governed South Africa and blacks were forced to live separately from whites.

C. The biggest problem facing Africans today is the continuing threat of wars.

D. In many countries, the civil wars have been going on for decades as different groups fight for control of the government.

E. Through the Internet, Africans could have better access to information and better contacts with the rest of the world.

F. Many of the problems facing Africa today have been worsened by this fighting over control of the government.

G. They didn't understand much about African tribal traditions, and so the borders of these countries didn't match the traditional borders of tribal lands.

Section B (10 marks)

Questions 61—65 are based on the following passage.

In many parts of the world, alien species are harming the environment and causing other problems. An alien species is a species of plant or animal that has moved from its original home to a new area. Sometimes people have intentionally introduced the new species; sometimes it arrives accidentally, as a side effect of international trade. In its new location, the alien species has no natural enemies, so it can grow and multiply without limit. Over time—sometimes decades, sometimes a few years—the new species takes living space and food away from the native plants and animals. The result can mean drastic change in the natural landscape and problems for people.

The tiger mosquito is an example of an alien species. This kind of mosquito is common in Asia, but in recent years it has moved to parts of southern Europe. Scientists believe that the eggs of this insect probably arrived inside some car tires that were filled with water. In a few years, the mosquitoes multiplied and spread over large areas of Italy and other countries. Tiger mosquitoes can reproduce faster than common European mosquitoes, so they quickly replaced a large percentage of the native mosquitoes. Though they don't cause serious disease in humans, tiger mosquitoes are a serious nuisance. They are far more aggressive than common European mosquitoes, and the effects of their bites are worse.

Another example of a different kind of animal that has recently moved to another continent is the zebra mussel. This small shellfish was first discovered in the Great Lakes of North America in 1986. It may have come over from Russia on a cargo ship. In a very few years, zebra mussels had spread over all the Great Lakes and into many important rivers. They have grown into thick masses, covering many areas of lakes or river bottoms. They have also covered and closed up pipes of power stations and water treatment centers.

Among the many examples of alien species of mammals that have caused damage is the Indian mongoose. This animal was brought to Hawaii in the 1800s to kill rats in sugarcane fields. Since then, they have grown in numbers so that today they are a major threat to bird life on the islands. One of the mongoose's favorite foods, in fact, is birds' eggs. Thus, the mongoose has caused great damage to poultry farmers in Hawaii, and it has greatly reduced the numbers of many native bird species. Many of these species, which are unique to the islands, are now at risk of extinction.

Questions 61—65

Answer the following questions according to the passage.

61. In what ways does the alien species get to a new area?
62. How did tiger mosquitoes move to Europe?
63. What is the difference between tiger mosquitoes and common European mosquitoes?
64. Where was the zebra mussel first discovered?
65. Why was the Indian mongoose brought to Hawaii in the 1800s?

Section C (10 marks)

Questions 66—70 are based on the following passage.

Do you think you're a good listener? Chances are you do. But studies show that most people seriously overestimate their ability to listen. The truth is we are generally not good at listening, and our listening comprehension declines as we age.

This was proven by Dr. Ralph Nichols, a pioneer in the scientific study of listening behaviour. With the help of school teachers in Minnesota, he conducted a simple experiment to test students' listening skills. He had teachers stop what they were doing mid-class, and then asked students to describe what their teachers had been talking about. You might assume that older kids, with more developed brains, would be better listeners. The results, however, showed otherwise: While 90 percent of first- and second-graders gave correct responses, this percentage dropped rapidly as the students got older. A little under half of junior high students could remember correctly, and only 25 percent of high school students got the answers right.

So why aren't we good at listening? One reason concerns the speed at which we think. The adult brain can process up to around 400 words per minute, more than three times faster than the speed an average person speaks. This means that we can easily think about something else while someone is talking to us, allowing our mind to wander or get sidetracked. Thinking about how you will reply while someone is still talking is one of the most common barriers to effective listening. The younger students in Dr. Nichols's experiment were better listeners partly because their brains were less developed—they lacked the extra brain power to be distracted.

Another factor that contributes to our poor listening is our ever-decreasing attention span. According to a study conducted by Microsoft, the age of smartphones has had a negative impact. In 2000—around the time the mobile revolution began—the average human attention span was 12 seconds. By 2013, it had fallen to 8 seconds.

Our mobile devices also provide constant distractions, which can be very disruptive to listening. Test results have shown that being interrupted by a cell phone message lowers listening comprehension by 20 percent.

Interruptions and other distractions, whether digital or more traditional, can cause a dramatic decline in listening ability—but they don't have to. More and more people now realize that listening is a skill that can be developed through practice. Learning to observe a speaker's body language and emotions, for example, can improve our active listening. Even the simple act of note-taking or making eye contact can help us stay focused while listening.

Questions 66—70

Complete the summary below with information from the passage, using no more than three words for each blank.

Most people are not good at listening and their listening comprehension declines as they get older. It was confirmed by Dr. Ralph Nichols, a great scientist in (66) _____. The results of his experiment indicated that the older the students, (67) _____ their listening skills. He thinks that the following factors (68) _____ poor listening: the speed at which we think and our ever-decreasing attention span. Moreover, the mobile devices, which provide constant distractions, (69) _____ listening as well. But practice can make our listening skills improve, such as (70) _____ a speaker's body language and emotions, the act of note-taking or making eye contact.
