Unfortunately, this often made the situation (44)_____ and the children were made to feel great embarrassment for something which they couldn't control. Nowadays, we know children with ADD need a lot of encouragement, teachers need help to deal with them and parents need support too. They shouldn't feel let down if they find out their child has ADD. In fact, it can be an invitation to help their child perform better and feel that the child's special needs are e (45)_____the attention they deserve.

Section B (5 marks)

Read the following passage and fill in each blank with one word in one of the following three ways: according to the context, by using the correct form of the given word(s), or by using the given letter(s) of the word. Write the answers on the answer sheet.

The world's biggest collection of papyrus (纸莎草) texts, or “papyri” is not in Egypt. It's in the Sackler Library at Oxford University in the UK. British archaeologists discovered the pieces of papyri in Egypt, but they took them to Britain more than 100 years ago. These days, there are laws to stop people (46)_____ (take) ancient objects, but in the past, it was different.

Lots of different information is on the papyri. Ancient people recorded important things like public events. They also made lists and used them to show, For example, how much gold (47) bel_____ to the king. But why did they use papyrus?

In Summer and Assyria, they wrote on clay tablets. When the Egyptians began to write, they used ink on papyrus. Papyrus plants grew everywhere (48)_____ the Nile River. The Egyptians created something like paper from the plant.

At first only the Egyptians used papyrus, but later many other people began to buy papyrus from Egypt. They (49)_____ (prefer) it because clay tablets were very heavy.

The Greeks and the Romans also used a lot of papyrus because they wrote many books. They didn't have (50)_____ (machine) to print the books—they copied every book by hand and that was how they shared their knowledge. The papyri at Oxford University contain some of this knowledge.

Part IV Reading Comprehension (30 marks)

There are three passages in this part. Each passage is followed by several questions. Respond to the questions using information from the passage. Remember to write the answers on the answer sheet.

Section A (10 marks)

Questions 51—55 are based on the following passage.

Before the technology for measuring and predicting the weather, people looked to nature and the environment for signs of what was to come. (51)_____ It was important for them to know what the weather was going to be like.

Even today, people often look to the natural world for weather forecasts and there are well-known sayings about the weather. Perhaps the most famous one is “Red sky at night, sailor's delight. Red sky in the morning, sailor's warning.” There may be some truth in this saying because in Britain if the sky is red in the evening, it means the atmosphere to the west is clear enough for sunlight to pass through. (52)_____ In the morning, however, red skies are caused by light hitting clouds that could bring bad weather.

Another popular saying is “When swallows fly high, the weather will be dry.” Swallow ws are common birds which feed on insects. Since insects usually fly higher in warm weather, swallows follow them. (53)_____

Some methods of predicting the weather are not only about the same day, though. Sometimes the weather on a particular day is a sign of what the weather will be like for a longer period. In Britain, the tradition is that if it rains on 15th July, St Swithun's Day, then it will rain for the next forty days. (54)_____ A fine St Swithun's Day means forty days of good weather. In Britain the weather in the middle of July often continues for the following few weeks, so this tradition appears to be true in about seven out of ten years. Other western European countries have similar traditions, too.

However, it isn't just in Europe that people look to the natural world for signs about the weather. On 2nd February in Pennsylvania in the USA, they celebrate Groundhog Day. The groundhog is a small animal that lives underground and sleeps all winter. When it is woken on 2nd February, it comes out of its underground home. (55)_____ They say that if it sees its shadow, it will return underground and the winter weather will continue for another six weeks. If it is cloudy, though, and it doesn't see its shadow, spring will come early. Studies have shown that there is no truth in this old tradition, but people enjoy it and continue celebrating it for fun.

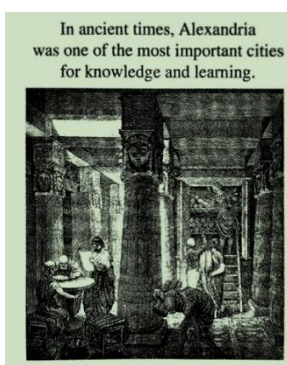

Questions 51—55

Choose the one which best fits each gap of 51—55 from the sentences A—G. There are two extra sentences which you do not need to use.

- A. The opposite is also supposed to be true.
- B. These methods of finding out about the weather are rarely correct.
- C. For example, farmers and sailors depended on good weather so that they could do their jobs.
- D. As most weather comes from this direction in Britain, good weather is probably on the way.
- E. The way these birds behave really only tells us about the present weather, though, and not about the future.
- F. People watch it closely to see how it will behave.
- G. These two examples give some indication of just what bad weather in Britain can be.

Section B (10 marks)

Questions 56—60 are based on the following passage.

Alexander the Great established Alexandria in 332 BC. He made it the capital of Egypt instead of Memphis, and it was the most important city in the country for many years. Here, the Ptolemy family, who were the kings and queens of Egypt after Alexander, built the greatest library of the ancient world.

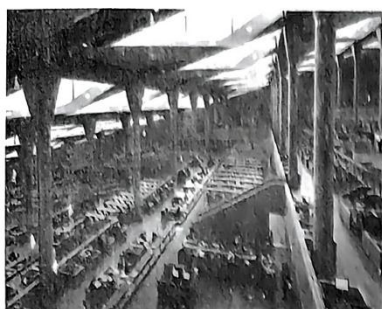

The Great Library of Alexandria contained thousands of books. They didn't look like the ones we use today; they didn't ha ve pages. They were actually papyrus scrolls that people wrote by hand and rolled up like carpets to store. The scrolls were a collection of all the knowledge of the Greeks, the Egyptians and other ancient people.

Many famous thinkers visited the library to study and to look for information. The library had a rule—everyone who studied there had to leave a copy of their work in the library. Maybe this is why the library had so many books.

Sadly, a fire destroyed the library. Without its books, our knowledge of the ancient world is incomplete. We have never found out how or why the fire happened. Some people believe that Julius Caesar burnt it by mistake when he was at war with Ptolemy XIII; other people say that Amr lb n Al Aas burnt it.

But now there is a new library. The Bibliotheca Alexandrina has been open since October 2002 close to the location of the ancient library. In addition to normal printed books, the library also stores books, maps, newspapers, photos, films and sound recordings electronically. Plus, it is the first library outside of the USA to store all of the web pages from every website on the Internet since it started in 1996.

The modern library faces the Mediterranean Sea. Its design is very special—it is a beautiful oval shape. A great wall surrounds the library with writing in 120 languages. Inside, it holds collections that represent cultures and ideas from all over the world. Just like the ancient library, the modern library is a place where people can learn about the world around them. But it's more than a library—it's a cultural centre that Egypt can be proud of and which has already delighted millions of visitors.

Questions 56—60

Answer the following questions with the information given in the passage.

56. Who built the Great Library of Alexandria?
57. Why were the books in the Great Library of Alexandria different from the ones we use today?
58. What rule did the Great Library of Alexandria have?
59. When did the Bibliotheca Alexandrina start to open?
60. What is special about the modern library's design?

Section C (10 marks)

Questions 61—65 are based on the following passage.

The Internet cuts down the use of paper, which is definitely good news for our trees and forests. But what about the “paperless” office? Fifty years ago, we were told that paper would not be needed, and everyone thought that the Internet would make that happen—some said by 1990. In fact, the millions of tons of paper being used in homes and offices continued to rise until very recently. Now, that figure is actually falling, although it's only by about one per cent each year.

Another great benefit for the planet has to be the fact that we can conduct a lot of business—even hold conferences—online. That has a real impact on our carbon footprint. Imagine how many tons of carbon we are now polluting the air with because we don't need to fly all over the world on business. We don't even need to drive to the bank, since we can manage our finances online too, so we are burning even less fuel.

Something about these figures didn't add up. If the Internet is so good for the planet, why are we still facing problems? The simple answer is that our habits have changed along with the technology. Plus, the population is increasing, so for every worker who sits at home on a computer, there are still many more who drive to work every day.

Another point worth considering is that around 200 billion emails are sent every day. Now, this figure is many times greater than the number of letters sent per day...ever! Because it's cheaper to send emails, we send more of them. Around half of these emails contain spam, by the way.

So what is all this costing the environment? The Internet is huge, so there are environmental repercussions (影响). Starting with the raw materials needed for the hardware, we have damage caused through mining and industrial processes. Each computer or smartphone contains a number of materials that have had a cost to the environment in terms of damage to the landscape and water consumption. There is, of course, significant pollution caused by the manufacturing process.

Questions 61—65

Complete the summary below with information from the passage, using no more than three words for each blank.

Despite the good news, the (61)_____ impact of the Internet is quite considerable. Although we were promised “(62)_____” offices, the amount of paper we use has only started (63)_____ very recently. The passage mentions (64)_____ in population as a factor that counteracts some of the benefits the Internet has brought. On the subject of emails, the passage says that approximately half of those sent contain spam. The mining of (65)_____ and industrial processes involved in hardware manufacture damage the environment.
